Back To The Fundamentals

UNITED STATES — GOOD ENOUGH, BUT NOT FOR A NOVEMBER HIKE

Earnings, a last batch of Fed speak before the next rate decision, and significant data risk will combine to present elevated market risks over the coming week.

This will be a massive week for earnings reports as 179 companies listed on the S&P500 release and industry breadth fans out beyond the early focus on financials. Some of them are closely followed for their guidance on discretionary consumer spending and big-ticket capital goods spending. Some of the key names will include Apple, VISA, Whirlpool, Caterpillar, Merck, P&G, 3M, GM, Capital One, AT&T, Coca-Cola, Southwest Airlines, State Street, Boeing, Dow Chemical, Goodyear, Ford, Colgate-Palmolive, Amazon.com, Alphabet (formerly Google), Exxon, Mastercard, Xerox and Chevron.

Shhhh! Zzzzipit!! That will be the message from the Fed after Tuesday next week when the Federal Reserve goes into communications black-out ahead of the following Wednesday's policy decision. Fed fund futures markets only have less than 20% odds of a hike at the November meeting and our call is for a hike in December after the US election. There is nothing to be gained from the Fed surprising markets that have about 70% odds on a December hike now; November just won't happen. Just before the black-out we'll hear from four Fed speakers. Three of those will speak on Monday including NY Fed President William Dudley (always voting) about the changing structure of the Treasury market, St. Louis Fed President James Bullard (voting) on the economy, and Chicago Fed President Charles Evans (who starts voting in January) on current economic conditions and monetary policy. Atlanta Fed President Dennis Lockhart speaks the next day on community development.

Data risk will be fairly heavy throughout the week with summary points as follows:

- Third quarter GDP growth hits the tapes next Friday. This is the first swing in a series of three before we get a firm handle on how the third quarter looked once everything through to services spending estimates is incorporated. For now, a number in the 2½% range seems reasonable to expect, and that would likely be good enough for the Fed even if it's only the first decent quarter for growth in the past four quarters and ahead of the frequent Q1 growth disappointments (chart 1). The Atlanta Fed's 'nowcast' estimate is 2% while the New York Fed's 'nowcast' estimate is 2.3%. Both estimates drifted lower as the quarter unfolded especially the Atlanta Fed measure that started in the 3¾% range and has since lost almost half of that early tracking.
- US durable goods orders (Thursday) are expected to be little changed. Boeing registered 55 plane orders versus 22 the month before which may keep the headline tally in the black, while US airlines placed no orders for planes from Bombardier, Embraer and Airbus during September or August. Key here will nevertheless be whether three consecutive monthly gains in core capital goods orders — ex-defense and aircraft that serves as a proxy for business investment — will build upon the gains or give back some of them. The odds may be stacked against a further gain given that this is the first time since July 2009 that we've seen three consecutive monthly gains in capital goods orders. The fact that spare capacity still exists in the US economy augurs against investment, but stabilization of energy investment will likely be a constructive force.
- Despite the gloom-mongering in the US Presidential election contest, US consumer confidence (Tuesday) is at its highest since August 2007. And why not? The so-called 'misery index' that combines the unemployment rate with the inflation rate sits at 6.5% which is almost three percentage points below its post-WWII average, ditto for the 1980-present average, and two points lower than the average so far in the 2000s.
- Pending home sales (Thursday) will be watched for signs of further gains to come in existing home sales after they rose by 3.2% in September. Recall that pending sales turn into completed resales 30-90 days after signing. A small rise is expected.

- New home sales (Wednesday) will also be a fresher gauge (along with pending existing sales) than completed resales. A massive gain in July may continue to be unwound in September's figures.
- S&P Case-Shiller Core Logic house prices (Tuesday) will probably remain around 5% higher than year-ago levels in Tuesday's August release;
- Regional manufacturing surveys continue to roll out including Tuesday's Richmond Fed metric for October, the KC Fed's survey on Thursday, and the Dallas Fed measure on Halloween the next week. Thus far, a pair of regional surveys (Philly and Empire) point to a decline in the next ISM headline reading that is due out on November 1st.

The US Treasury auctions 2s, 5s, 7s and 2 year floating rate notes.

ASIA — PROFIT GROWTH HELPS TO COUNTER CHINA CREDIT WORRIES

Earnings reports and macro data could well influence local markets over the coming week but nothing strikes me as holding out the prospect of impacting the broad global market tone.

Forty-nine Japanese firms listed on the Nikkei 225 release earnings reports over the coming week including names like Canon, Nomura, Ricoh, Daiwa Securities, Mitsubishi Motors, and an array of rail, chemicals and other firms. Nineteen Korean firms listed on the Kospi release earnings including names like Samsung, Hyundai Motor and Hankook Tire.

Regional data risks include the following:

- China releases industrial profits on Wednesday and will contribute to the freshened perspective on Asian corporate health. They've been soaring so far this year and are growing at the fastest rate since 2013 (chart 2). That has always been among the factors we've pointed to by way of allaying some of the concern about corporate credit markets (see here).
- South Korea releases Q3 GDP growth on Tuesday and it will follow a decent first half in the context of the Bank of Korea's recent forecast for 2.8% full-year growth in 2016.
- Australia releases Q3 inflation on Tuesday amidst hope that the latest reading stabilizes what has been a declining trend throughout the past couple of years. Headline inflation was 3% y/y in 2014Q2 and two years later had fallen to 1%. This gave the RBA the motivation to ease monetary policy by 75bps starting in February of last year.
- Japan releases exports, CPI and the jobless rate for September. Exports are a miserable story as they have been falling at a 10% y/y pace which is the worst rate of contraction since the GFC.

Chart 2

EUROPE — ECONOMY AND EARNINGS IN FOCUS

Now that the ECB disappears until its next policy decision on December 8th, the focus will return to tracking growth prospects across the Eurozone economy as well as earnings and particularly reports from key European banks.

- At the top of the list will be Q3 GDP growth figures from the UK, France and Spain. The UK is expected to grow at its slowest pace since Q3 of last year but remain positive so far in the post-Brexit world. That doesn't matter much given the lagging influences of the investment shock that the UK is going through and that will take well into 2017 and beyond to evaluate. France is expected to avert recession after a mild Q2 contraction and post a modest rebound. Spain is expected to continue to be a growth leader in Europe.

- Fresher and higher-frequency Eurozone growth signals will be represented by purchasing managers indices for the month of October. They arrive on Monday morning to start the week.
- Inflation reports out of Germany, France and Spain may show ever-so-slight additional progress toward ECB inflation goals while nevertheless remaining roughly in the 0% y/y (Spain) to ½% y/y (Germany) range.
- Consumers will be a focal point as well, as French consumer spending and retail sales in Germany and Italy will be released.
- Germany's IFO business confidence metric and Italian industrial sales and orders round out the calendar of data risks.

Earnings reports could also quite easily impact markets with Deutsche Bank set to release Q3 results on Thursday. In all, 8 German firms listed on the Dax, another 8 listed on the CAC 40 including Peugeot, Airbus and BNP Paribas, and 7 firms on the FTSE100 including Barclays, GlaxoSmithKline and RBS could not only impact the equity market tone but also concerns about systemic risks in Europe's banking system. The reason these reports matter to the ECB is that failure to calm stock markets risks adding downside risks to the lending cycle in Europe which carries negative growth connotations (chart 3).

Sweden's Riksbank and Norway's Norges Bank issue rate decisions and neither are likely to alter their monetary policy stances. The risk to doing so could return later in the year if the ECB eases monetary policy at its December 8th meeting.

CANADA — THE FOCUS WILL BE ON EARNINGS

Earnings releases will be the main focus in next week's markets. There is nothing else by way of domestic influences on the market tone and so, for the most part, rates and CAD should be driven by the global market tone and ongoing assessment of the risk of future easing by the Bank of Canada (chart 4).

Thirty-nine firms listed on the TSX release earnings reports next week with a particular focus upon resources. Some of the key names will include West Fraser, CN Rail, Barrick Gold, Suncor, Potash Corp, Eldorado Gold, Colliers International, and Imperial Oil. It is too early to assess the tone of the Canadian earnings season that lags the US but we'll have a better feel for this by the end of next week at which point about one-fifth of TSX firms will have released.

Wholesale trade never really gets our hearts fluttering but what it says on Monday about 6% of the economy will be the last piece of the puzzle ahead of the following week's GDP print for the month of August. So far, we have a mixed picture of how the economy performed in August:

- Housing starts fell 10.4% on both multis (-15.2%) and singles (-4.2%);
- Manufacturing shipment volumes were up by 1.2%;
- Export volumes were up by 0.4%;
- Hours worked fell by 0.3% ;
- Retail sales volumes are due out on Friday October 21st.

Canada auctions 10 year bonds on Wednesday.

LATAM — BANXICO WATCHING US POLLS

There shouldn't be much by way of domestic sources of market risk facing countries across Latin America next week. They are likely to follow the broad global tone.

As poll numbers continue to show a rising likelihood of a victory by Hillary Clinton in the US Presidential election, markets may continue to reassess the outlook for the Mexican peso and Mexican monetary policy. The last rate hike on September 29th was felt by some to be one too many. The peso has strengthened versus the USD over the past three weeks or so. If Trump loses the US election, it could strengthen further (chart 5). That then raises the likelihood that policy tightening could be unwound as inflation risk from a previously depreciating peso reverses.

Data risk will include Mexican retail sales on Tuesday, while Chile releases retail sales and industrial production next Friday.
